

James Kniestedt is the founder of Gravick Group and actively contracts with several global companies from various vertical industries operating in highly conflictive areas around the world. James has 27 years of experience improving asset efficiencies for customers through risk mitigation initiatives as well as product integrity and custodial control activities. SecNet, one of GRAVICK's security focused internal control platforms, has operated with successful results in areas like Mexico and Latin America for many years. Researched, Developed and Implemented from his former experience as a member of US Special Forces, James brings a strategic business perspective coupled with a strong tactical and operational execution ability. Upon leaving government service James was contracted to the Special Warfare Center in the Anti-Terrorist Division. After that post, he was recruited into private security assignments. James' unique experience has enabled him to research, develop and implement transportation security systems throughout high risk areas, adversely impacting illicit supply chain activity and drastically curtailing nefarious intent. James consults with Dept. of Homeland Security monthly on key trade security initiatives that impact supply chain metrics across various borders. Specific to Mexico, James has consulted at a government level with key law enforcement and trade agencies and has been able to bring sustained economic results to his client base through improved risk management strategies.